Some argue that only patients with a combination of several factors should be given drugs - and that these might anyway get more benefit from tackling, say, smoking or a weight problem.